Native Genius.

Something over a year ago Knoxville became aware of the fact that a genius was in its midst, in the person of Lloyd Branson, a youth "to fortune and to fame unknown," but whose efforts in painting evinced a high order of talent. Recognizing the fact, Dr. Boyd and a number of other gentlemen exerted themselves in his behalf and a sum of money was raised to enable him to presecute his studies and qualify himself for the position he was designed by nature to

Young Branson during the past year has painted several excellent portraits, which have gained for him considerable local reputation, and have been highly complimented by gentle-m n familiar with art, not only in the large cities of this country, but in Europe.

Young Branson's precocity was developed at a very tender age, when he would obtain small quantities of paint from the house painters and portray the features of prominent men which he sold to his schoolmates for small sums. These were executed with scarcely an effort, and though crude as the infantile effort of Benjamin West with his baby sister, may yet, if Fortune is propitious, be cited with as much pride as that of the distinguished artist above

Not only has Branson a remarkably correct idea of mere painting, but also of models, as we are told, his first being made when at play with some of his childish friends, and if we are correctly informed, before he had given any indications of his extraordinary talents, the mato that of any other nation.

A Young Man Commits Suicide In Chatta-

The Chattanooga Herald of yesterday contains the following in relation to the suicide of a young man named John Markwater, which

The deceased had been engaged in the dairy business, was a native of Switzerland, and was about thirty-two years of age. From what we can gather in the way of information, he had sometime since extended his business by placing himself under heavier obligations than he could well meet on their becoming due, and it is thought that this circumstance, which had for some time weighed heavily upon his mind, led to the rash act. his property, and freely exculpated all persons gists. but himse f from being in any way instrumental to the deed. His property was willed in this letter to a young woman, now living with the family of Mr. Jacob Kuntz, to whom it is said he was engaged to be married as soon as he could release himself of debt. A coroner's jury was summoned, and rendered a verdict in accordance with the circumstances of his death. He had the reputation of being an honest and industrious young man.

What Boyd's Attorneys Think. On the evening of the day on which Thomas G. Boyd's celebrated letter was published in the CHRONICLE, two of his counsel in the cases referred to, and sought to be dismissed by a lit-tle diplomacy, were engaged in conversation on the hair to whiten or fall out from the scalp. the subject-one a Republican, the other a Dem-

The Republican said to his Democratic associate: "This is the result of false teaching by Democratic newspapers in charging Grant with being corrupt, and being ready to do anything for political effect. Boyd has supposed his party papers would tell nothing but the truth, and has been mixed; and you see the awkward fix in which our client is thus placed by Democratic

The Democratic law heard his Republican associate through; then shrugged his shoulders and replied: "That can't be true. Boyd was never misled by anything that appeared in the Democratic papers. He has been a Democrat too long, and understands the tactics of the party too well to believe anything that a Democratic newspaper would say in regard to a political opponent-especially in regard to Grant."
